UNSW - LIVESTREAM Earth 2050

10 September. 12.30pm

Let's imagine we are now in the year 2050. Though science predicted the certainty of climate change many decades before, we were collectively preoccupied with more immediate matters and did not make the future health of our planet a priority. So how are we living our daily lives?

We invite you to join us for the next webinar in the UNSW Science Alumni Sci-Fi Series: Earth 2050 where we'll take a futuristic look at climate change and what the year 2050 may hold if we continue 'business as usual carbon emissions'.

Taking lessons learnt from the current global health crisis, and behavioural change research, we will then discuss how we can positively shift our response to climate change so that the outlook is not so stark.

The Interview Questions and How to Nail the Job Interview

Job interviews can be damn intimidating. You spend ages psyching yourself up to even apply for the thing and then you get the call offering you an interview, go you!

Full disclosure; the first time I had a job interview (it was for a Brumby's bakery you guys) was also the first time I discovered my body is capable of producing sweat from many new places, including, (but not limited to); the front of my shins and tops of my hands. I get how much of a challenge this can be.

Working in a career or volunteer initiative that assists vulnerable people is one sure way to do that, and to gain some good karma back into your life.
